Course description

Whether you love numbers and statistics, or they make your head spin, this full-day course will open your eyes to the possibilities of using data to tell your story. We'll dive into housing data from CMHC and Statistics Canada to better measure the impact to housing in your community. Learn about data sources, how to access them and find resources and support to use them, how you can use data to measure the impact of your work, and gain an understanding of the limits of what we can accomplish with the current data.

This course will be led by the leadership of the Chartered Institute of Housing Canada, the destination for education, professional standards and accreditation in Canada's affordable and social housing sector. This day of training will complement the accredited learning program that leads to designation as a housing professional.

Audience

People who work in housing policy, housing planning, housing providers, advocacy and researchers, students

Every person who completes the training will receive a Certificate of Completion from the Chartered Institute of Housing Canada.

Learning outcomes

- Understand available data on housing including core housing need
- Articulate the value of good data and how to leverage it in your work
- Be inspired by innovations in the field of housing data

Pre-reading

- Select reports will be sent to learners one week before the training day to prepare for the day of training.
